CONTRACTORS

Let us make lift stations easier for you

by Anisa Bear

Contractors become involved in pump station projects at various phases. Romtec Utilities works with these companies to ensure that the best pumping system design can be supplied to the contractor, delivered on time to the project site and installed efficiently by the contractor.

Often, a contractor is quoting the supply and installation of a pump station design that originated with an engineer representing the municipality or other owner. It can be a real headache for everyone if the contractor tries to “piece together” the pump station. When purchasing multiple components from multiple vendors, figuring out who is responsible for what can be very confusing.

However, if contractors come to Romtec Utilities, we provide one stop shopping and a warranty for the entire system from a single company. Romtec Utilities supports the contractor all the way from submittal of a design through completions of start-up and commissioning of a new system.

Romtec Utilities provides the following services to make your pump station purchase an easy and smooth process:

- Romtec Utilities creates its complete Scope of Supply and Design Submittal for the contractor to submit to the reviewing agency.
- Romtec Utilities responds, in writing, to any comments on this document. We work aggressively to get your submittal approved and into production in a timely manner.
- Romtec Utilities provides an on-site construction advisor to ensure that the underground components are installed correctly.
- Romtec Utilities’ electrical engineer provides off-site assistance to help your electrician install the Romtec Utilities control panel.
- Romtec Utilities’ start-up technician will lower the pumps into the wet well and be the first to start the system. Our technician will also do all necessary testing to confirm that the pump station is functioning as designed. A complete Operation & Maintenance Manual is delivered at this time.
- Romtec Utilities’ start-up technician will stay an extra day to train all operating personnel.

Let Romtec Utilities make your next pump station construction project a breeze!
